Save The Children (STC)	Save The Children focuses on sustainable development through the design and implementation of community based vegetable gardens. Project volunteers work directly with village leaders to design and build wells and gardens, ensuring “buy in” from the community being serviced. Long- term sustainability is ensured through education programs that focus on agronomy and agro-business.	West Africa	Alleviation of poverty And Economic Development	Save The Children is a well-respected, international organization with projects throughout the developing world. Its focus on sustainability ensures that projects last to benefit people for many years. We also like the focus on agro-business, which will promote economic development and lead to further growth. With low administrative costs, over 90% of the money that STC receives in donations goes directly to funding its projects.	$5,000,000
The Women’s Network (TWN)	The Women’s Network provides women with small “micro” loans to enable them start small, sustainable businesses. Many loan recipients start weaving and dying co-operatives that produce rugs for export. Soap, perfume, and jewelry have been other successful cottage industries funded by TWN.	Pakistan	Women’s Rights And Economic Development	Nearly 98% of TWN’s loans are paid back on time, indicating the success of the businesses being funded. One element of the program is the requirement that loan recipients must invest a percentage of their profits back to the program, promoting sustained economic growth. We feel that this program offers a successful business model that can be replicated around the world, and promote sustainable development	$12,000,000
